

Hello,

You need competent people with initiative to work with you and use what they know to keep your job simple and to keep your company vision on top. My name is Ben Sammons and I can do this, and I will do so without loss of integrity or acting without professional respect for my colleagues.

My passion lies in resolving pain. I frequently see people doing painfully tedious or complicated processes when they should not have to. Other pain comes from unsolved problems that have no solution yet, but still can be solved. Sometimes a little bit of code can have a great effect in making the world less painful for everyone.

Refer to my resume for technology specific experience, but for now I am primarily a Node.js & Postgres developer with experience in containerization. I can work as a site reliability engineer or a backend developer, though I have experience throughout the stack. I learn to apply new technology and conventions quickly and can mentor other developers in what I know or make decisions about architecture, as well as rationally handle issues during production failures.

Best regards,
Ben Sammons
